INDEX GUIDE

[See also the suggestions How to Use This Book, page ix.]

Numbers after index entries refer not to pages but to categories and paragraphs of the text. The text is divided into 1042 numbered categories and each category has numbered paragraphs. Most index references are made with two-part numbers; the first part is the number of the category, the part after the period is the number of the specific paragraph. On the opposite page, the number 681.5 after the entry ablution directs you to category 681 and then to paragraph 5 within that category.

An entry such as ablution, which consists of a term in boldface type and a number, reflects a term that appears only once in the text. When a word or phrase occurs in several places in the text it is indexed as a boldface entry and supplied with numbered subentries that indicate all of its text positions and its meaning at each of them. At the entry abhor, for example, the first lightface entry indicates that the word abhor appears in the third paragraph of category 867, where it has the meaning "dislike"; the second that abhor occurs in the fifth paragraph of category 930, in the sense of "hate." In a few cases, a subentry indicates a broad subject area rather than a limited meaning. Such is the case with the subentry "sailing" under the bold entry aboard.

When a bold index entry has several parts of speech in the same spelling, the subentries are divided with part-of-speech labels. If, therefore, you are looking for a noun, you can ignore all of the subentries except those for nouns. The labels occur here in the same sequence that is used in a text category: n. (nouns), v. (verbs), adj (adjectives), adv (adverbs), prep (prepositions), conj (conjunctions), interj (interjections), and phr (phrases). When a bold entry has but one part of speech, no label is used.

In order to keep the index within reasonable bounds, many of the terms in the text have been omitted here. The omissions do not impair the efficiency of the index because the editors have taken care to drop only the terms that were least likely to serve as starting points, or those for which ample clues are entered in other forms.

Very few terms in word lists are indexed because most of them have no synonyms. Access to specific items in these lists can be had through the more general terms that serve as their headings: receptacles, art styles, philosophers, etc.

When entries for several different forms of a word would repeat references to the same categories, less familiar forms are usually dropped. The verb abash and the adjective abashed are indexed, but not the noun abashment. If you want synonyms for the noun, pick the desired meaning from the verbs or adjectives, and look among the nouns in the category to which you are directed.

Some adverbs ending in -ly have been dropped, so have the more obscure technical terms, quotations, and most long phrases. Many shorter phrases are omitted also, especially verb phrases that begin with auxiliaries, and phrases for specific subjects and limited concepts that are indexed under very familiar short or more general terms. Thus, alive is indexed, but "be alive" is not; ignorance, but not "gross ignorance"; linguistics, but not "historical linguistics"; hospital, but not "government hospital."
